Call for Authors/Papers

Pressing Security Challenges for the New Administration

The Journal of Strategic Security announces a new call for papers that addresses some of the prominent security challenges facing the United States and its allies in the next four years, coinciding with the incoming President Barack Obama Administration. Sample topics may include:

Intelligence:

- Homeland security and domestic intelligence; intelligence education and training; intelligence reform; intelligence case studies; new technology for the intelligence community; lessons learned in intelligence from the past decade; WMD intelligence; role of strategic intelligence; role of tactical and operational intelligence; other areas of interest.

Terrorism/Counterterrorism:

- Criminal intelligence analysis; domestic terrorism threat; evolution of the terrorist threat to the American homeland; emerging terrorist threats; cyberterrorism; advanced technology breakthroughs to combat terrorism; gaming; strategic defense posture and role of military in providing for homeland defense; WMD terrorism; other areas of interest.

JSS accepts unsolicited proposals, book reviews, and well-written scholarly papers on all aspects of strategic security – your creativity and unique perspective are welcome.

We welcome submissions from students, professionals, and scholars in intelligence, military, law enforcement, government, academia, and the private sector. If you have a proposal for a paper or a completed manuscript, feel free to submit it for consideration according to the instructions below.

Manuscript and Submission Specifications
Most articles should be from 2,000 to 7,500 words. Occasionally, we print longer pieces (greater than 7,500 words) and shorter pieces (around 2,000 words or less) in a section of the Journal called "Short Takes". Regardless of length, parties submitting an article or proposal should include the following with their submission:

- A resume or bio summarizing the writer's background and contact information
- If available, a publication history containing the author's most recent publications

Please submit all documents in electronic format, Microsoft Word preferred. No hard copy submissions will be accepted. Submitted manuscripts should be double-spaced, in 12 pt. Courier or Times New Roman font. All manuscripts must follow the Chicago Manual format and style.

Send all submissions and queries to:
editor@henley-putnam.edu

Please allow two to four weeks for a reply.

All articles that are initially accepted for publication are subject to peer review. The author may be asked to make changes as requested by the reviewer and editor before the work is published. Only original manuscripts not previously published or under consideration for publication elsewhere will be considered. If accepted for publication, all manuscripts become the exclusive property of JSS, and cannot be published elsewhere without the written consent of Henley-Putnam University.

About the Journal of Strategic Security
Henley-Putnam University publishes a peer-reviewed academic journal, Journal of Strategic Security (JSS). The journal is published quarterly. The purpose of JSS is to create an academic forum for scholarship and discussion of the larger issues of security from a multi-disciplinary perspective, combining the fields of intelligence, terrorism/counterterrorism studies, and personal protection, among others.

About Henley-Putnam University
Henley-Putnam is a leader in the education of the developing Strategic Security field because of its focused curriculum, advanced degrees, collaboration across military, law enforcement, and the intelligence community boundaries, and because of the "real-world experience" of its faculty and founders. It offers bachelors and masters degrees in Intelligence Management, Terrorism/Counterterrorism Studies, and Personal Protection Management.
