

Justice Services International (JSI) is currently recruiting federal, state and local law enforcement professionals, corrections officers, attorneys, judges, and others in the legal profession to serve on U.S. Department of State (DOS) Criminal Justice Program Support (CJPS) missions in developing countries.

JSI headquartered in Chantilly, Virginia, is a joint venture specifically designed to address this need and was formed by:

- Mission Essential Personnel (MEP), a leading language and cultural advisor for the Department of Defense (DOD).
- Development Alternatives Incorporated (DAI), the leading implementer of international development programs for the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID).
- DECO Incorporated, a key law enforcement and security provider to DOS and for domestic sites throughout the United States.
- EOD Technology Incorporated (EODT), a key provider of logistics, life support, security and transportation for DOD and DOS.

Because of this combination of skills and experience; JSI is an innovative answer to the complex challenge of establishing law enforcement, criminal justice sector reform, and rule of law systems in crisis and post crisis locations world-wide. The JSI strategy is based on a simple premise: a customized team with an innovative approach that focuses on delivering results.

The heart of this new approach is the National Criminal Justice Registry, designed to ensure that a large pool of highly qualified, superbly-trained, motivated and immediately deployable 'teams' are available to satisfy any CJPS task order, anywhere in the world.

The Registry contains information on individuals who have applied for and been accepted as members of the Protect and Serve America (PSA) organization. The primary criteria for membership in PSA is a desire and commitment to extend the principles of justice, the rule of law, and basic human rights in countries torn by conflict, civil unrest, rampant corruption and similar calamities.

Policing, corrections, justice administration, international development, and other professionals apply for membership in PSA and are accepted into the organization based on verifiable education, training, experience, certification and professional accomplishments. PSA will provide its members with a variety of services, which will include:

- Job opportunities
- Professional development and training via 'distance learning'
- Clearinghouse for 'lessons learned', best practices, and engagement 'after action reports' for members, academics, and practitioners
- Newsletters and social networking
- Journal articles and other exchanges of materials of professional interest
- Notification of seminars, workshops, and other opportunities to engage with criminal justice, international development, and security professionals.

Interested individuals should visit our website at www.justice-si.com and forward your resume thru the PSA link. Please highlight all training experience.
